

It's hard to believe it's already been a year since I met Tashi. It feels like just yesterday we were strangers, awkwardly trying to figure out how to be friends. But somehow, we clicked. She's such a special person, always bringing sunshine into my life.

Tashi is one of the kindest people I know. She's always there to lend an ear, offer a shoulder to cry on, and give the best advice. She's the friend who's always happy to celebrate your successes with you, but who also knows how to comfort you when you're feeling down.

I have to admit, our friendship hasn't always been easy. We've had our fair share of tough times, and I'm ashamed to say that I've made my fair share of mistakes along the way. There have been times when I've let her down, or when I've been too caught up in my own thoughts to be there for her. But despite all of that, Tashi has always been there for me, patiently guiding me back onto the right path and forgiving me when I've messed up.

I'm so eager to meet her in person, to give her a big hug and thank her for everything she's done for me. But I know that she's a shy and introverted person, and sometimes that makes it hard for her to open up. I've noticed that she gets nervous and unsure of herself, and it breaks my heart to see her like that. I wish she could see herself through my eyes - as a strong, capable, and beautiful person who deserves all the love and confidence in the world.

Despite her shyness, Tashi has a way of making me feel seen and heard. She's always been there to listen, to offer words of encouragement, and to help me see things from a different perspective. I'm so grateful for her presence in my life, and I hope that one day she'll be able to see her own worth and feel more confident in herself.

I'm so lucky to have Tashi in my life. She's more than just a friend, she's like family to me. I'm grateful for her unwavering support, her unconditional love, and her unrelenting patience. I'm grateful that she's stuck with me through all the ups and downs, and that she's helped me become a better person. I can't imagine my life without her. I'm so grateful for everything she's done for me this past year, and I can't wait to see what adventures we have together in the years to come.